MS 226 Alana Singh

Class 602 November 15, 2015

What are you thankful for this year?

Every day we feel gratitude for many things we have in our lives. It is a miraculous little thing. It can be so small and simple to show and yet sometimes it can be so enormous that we find that we cannot understand and sometimes we forget about it. I am thankful for every single experience that led me to a new day. As a young person growing up, I see many challenges around me and I depend on adults for guidance. I may encounter many mistakes which will cause me to cry or be sad but in the end it all matters. Every step, every decision and every difficulty makes me appreciate what I have.

I am mostly thankful for waking up and seeing sun light. The sun has many good benefits and without its light and heat, the world would be a dark place. Sunlight gives me a happy way to start my day with vitamin D. Vitamin D helps me get healthy and strong bones. Plus waking up to a beautiful day allows me to see everything and everyone that I am thankful for. I am grateful for the sun because it keeps me warm.

I am also thankful for my mother, who was the first people to hold me, love me, who nurtured, who taught, who cheered, who supported me and stayed by my side if I am not well. My mother tells me positive things to think about. She, along with my father gave me a home filled with love and food to eat. Without love the world would be a sad place.

Gratitude and thanks are what I always feel for teachers who take part in my development which shaped the most important part of my life. Teachers see things in you that you didn't, and they challenge you to do your best. Without teachers, a single book will not be opened. I am thankful for education because not everyone is given this opportunity in the world.