WHEREAS, Prader-Willi Syndrome (PWS) is a rare genetic disorder due to an abnormality on the 15th chromosome; and

WHEREAS, Present from birth, PWS is characterized by obesity, decreased muscle tone, decreased mental capacity, and hypogonadism; and

WHEREAS, At first, an infant with PWS will have trouble growing and gaining weight; because of weak muscles (hypotonia), the infant is not able to drink from a bottle, and may need special feeding techniques or tube feedings until his or her muscles become stronger; between ages one through six years, the child with PWS suddenly develops a tremendous interest in food, and starts overeating; and

WHEREAS, It is believed that the child with PWS never feels full after eating, and may actually go on eating binges, which leads to morbid obesity; and

WHEREAS, It is estimated that PWS occurs in one of 12,000 to 15,000 births and that approximately 80% of those who have the disease in the United States are still unknown to the Prader-Willi Syndrome Association; and

WHEREAS, It is not uncommon for individuals with PWS to have sleep apnea, respiratory problems, high blood pressure and/or diabetes; and

WHEREAS, There is no cure for PWS; however, the physical problems caused by the syndrome can be managed; during infancy, special feeding techniques and formulas can assist the infant in growth; and

WHEREAS, Physical therapy and exercise help improve strength and coordination; speech therapy helps children who are lacking in their language skills, and as the child grows, eating and weight problems can be controlled through a balanced, low-calorie diet and weight monitoring, along with external food restriction and daily exercise; and

WHEREAS, Individuals and organizations which bring greater awareness to particular health issues, and assist people with specific illnesses in their quest for dignity and independence, are a great benefit to the health and welfare of all citizens; now, therefore, be it
