January 22, 2010

In response to the recent aftershocks in Haiti, Sen. José M. Serrano is urging New Yorkers to continue their much-needed support throughout the aftermath of this crisis.

"The recent earthquake, and subsequent aftershocks have completely devastated Haiti's capital of Port-au-Prince. The outpouring of support from New Yorkers has been a testament to the awareness and compassion of the people of this state. However, the recovery effort will be arduous and ongoing, and it is important to make a long-term commitment to assist the people of Haiti.

"Although we are experiencing difficult fiscal times here at home, I encourage all New Yorkers to continue their generosity, and to donate what they can to their relief organization of choice."
