New Law Lets Police Stop Drivers for Texting

ANDREW J LANZA July 13, 2011

| ISSUE: CELL PHONES

A new law in NY will allow police to stop and ticket drivers they see texting on the road, even when that's the only apparent violation. Previously, police could only cite a driver for the traffic violation if they were stopped primarily for another offense, such as speeding. Please remain conscious of this new law while driving.
