Senator Golden Votes to Toughen Laws for Driving Under the Influence

MARTIN J. GOLDEN January 24, 2012

Albany - State Senator Martin J. Golden (R-C-I, Brooklyn) yesterday afternoon, voted to support legislation in the New York State Senate that creates new penalties for individuals supervising another driver while also under the influence of drugs or alcohol, also known as Abbagail's Law (S.164C). The bill, sponsored by Senator George Maziarz (R-C, Newfane), is named after eight-year-old Abbagail Buzard, who died in a car accident caused by an inexperienced driver who was supervised by a parent under the influence of alcohol.

Senator Golden stated, "Abbagail's Law makes it clear that 'supervising drivers' that are drunk will be held accountable for their irresponsible actions. It's simple to understand: if you are supervising a younger driver, you must be sober. Otherwise, the consequences can be tragic, and lives can be lost. We must create a way here in New York State to bring the guilty to justice. Abby had her whole life in front of her, and she had it taken away. We owe it to her and her mother to try to change the system."

In September 2009, Abbagail Buzard was at a family gathering when her father, who had been drinking, convinced a 17-year-old cousin with a learner's permit to drive him to a store to get more beer. Abbagail and three other children also were in the car, with Abbagail sitting on someone's lap in the back seat. The young driver was operating the vehicle at unreasonable speeds and lost control of the car. Abigail was thrown from the car when it rolled down an embankment, eventually trapping her underneath the car and killing her. Under current law, neither the driver nor the father could be prosecuted for the circumstances leading to her death.

This bill creates new penalties for supervising drivers under the influence of alcohol or drugs. If a supervising driver has a blood-alcohol concentration (BAC) of 0.18 percent or more, they would be charged with a Class E felony. If the BAC concentration is lower, they would face a Class A misdemeanor.

The bill has been sent to the Assembly.
