The beginning of deer season represents one of the most important economic cycles of the year. Deer hunting is a mainstay of the regional and statewide recreational economy, by some estimates accounting for $2 billion economic activity and 28,000 jobs statewide. Steuben County, for example, remains one of the premiere deer hunting destinations in the Northeast.

It's also time to share our annual reminder on one of this region's proudest and most successful traditions: the Venison Donation Coalition.

The Coalition has stated its mission this way, "With the downturn of the economy, budget cuts throughout the country, and increased layoffs, more and more Americans are feeling the crunch and being left hungry. Those going hungry are families, children and single parents and the donation of venison can help feed them."

Over the years, the Coalition has indeed helped put a good meal on many tables. Since 1999, in fact, the Coalition has coordinated the processing of an average of 39 tons of venison annually and helped provide over 4 million servings of highly nutritious, low-fat, high-protein meat.

Amazing, and timely. Census figures in 2013 revealed that the state's poverty rate was the highest it's been since 1998. More than three million New Yorkers live below the official poverty level. That's the highest total in 12 years.

And we all can help. As the Coalition notes on its website ("Feed 4 People for Just a Buck"), the donation of $1 can help provide four meals. For every dollar donated, in fact, the Coalition puts 90 cents towards processing donated venison.
