About Yellow Ribbon Day

- Since 2006, New York State has unanimously proclaimed April 9 to be Yellow Ribbon Day, in commemoration of the date on which Staff Sgt. Keith “Matt” Maupin was captured by Iraqi insurgents in 2004, becoming the first POW of the Iraq War.
- Matt’s parents, in the hopes that it would aid in locating their son, sent care packages and photos to active duty troops following his capture. Matt’s body was not recovered and returned to his native Clermont County Ohio until 2008.
- Thanks to the tireless work and dedication of Carol Pingelski Hotaling and many others, yellow ribbon day is now recognized not only in New York State, but in the U.S. Congress, where U.S. Reps. Paul Tonko (D-NY) and Brad Wenstrup (R-OH) introduced H.Res 263 expressing support for designating April 9th as Yellow Ribbon Day
- The purpose of the day is to honor and express gratitude for the service and sacrifice of active duty troops like Matt and their families, both at home and abroad.
- Yellow ribbons first became a symbol of support during the Iran hostage crisis, when 52 Americans were held captive for 444 days from Nov. 4, 1979 to Jan. 20, 1981
- Yellow ribbon day has received national recognition from numerous organizations, including American Gold Star Mothers and bipartisan support from members of the U.S. Congress.
- Blue Star Mothers of America, Saratoga County Clerk’s Office and municipalities throughout the county are collecting donated personal care items and food snacks that will be sent in “Freedom Boxes” to troops around the world

- The National League of POW/MIA Families says that New York currently has 104 unaccounted for individuals, the third most of any state to date. Yellow Ribbon Day is held in part to honor those whose fates remain unknown
