BUFFALO, NY – Senator Tim Kennedy (D-Buffalo) and New York State Lieutenant Governor Kathy Hochul joined John R. Oishei Children's Hospital of Buffalo Foundation Vice President, Andrew Bennett, along with local community and government leaders Thursday night to kick off the fourth year of #WarmUpWNY, a blanket drive designed to bring the comforts of home to our region's youngest patients during hospital stays. The drive began in 2016, after Senator Kennedy learned that simple items like warm blankets and socks can bring much-needed comfort to pediatric patients, but are not a reimbursable expense for the hospital. Due to the high volume of young patients our community's children's hospital sees every day, keeping the supply of donated blankets stocked is a challenge, which is why Kennedy decided to step in. Thursday evening's 'Blankets N' Brews' kickoff party encouraged volunteers to come out and make fleece-tied blankets or donate new blankets at Resurgence Brewery's new location on Chicago Street in Buffalo.

"Since our drive began, the City of Good Neighbors has lived up to its name and then some, donating more than 30,000 blankets to our region's children during what may be the scariest time of their lives," said Senator Tim Kennedy. "The #WarmUpWNY drive is truly a team effort, with donations coming in from everywhere; from my colleagues in government, to Buffalo businesses, to the very people who call our city and region home - it is a collaboration that brings out the best in our community, and I'm thrilled to once again host this drive along with our 40 incredible partners who are serving as drop off locations."

"The Warm Up WNY Blanket Drive is a great annual event that provides thousands of blankets to children to help ease their recovery in the hospital setting," said Lieutenant Governor Kathy Hochul. "I commend Senator Kennedy for his ongoing efforts and I'm pleased to take part in this program for another year to benefit the Oishei Children's Hospital and its patients. We want to make sure children have the comfort of their own home during their hospital stay, and this community effort helps to achieve that important goal."

"We are grateful to Senator Tim Kennedy and the entire Western New York community for their continuing support of the patients and families Oishei Children's Hospital cares for," said Andrew Bennett, vice president of The Children's Hospital of Buffalo Foundation. "These blankets help patients feel at home during a difficult time. Through the Warm Up WNY drive and the generosity of our community, we've been able to have a supply of blankets for patients year-round.”

According to doctors, nurses, and parents, it’s common for a young patient to become anxious over the uncertainty and unfamiliarity that a trip to the hospital can bring. They say even the smallest and simplest items can remind kids of home and help to calm their nerves. The drive was inspired by the Healing Arts Program at Oishei Children’s Hospital, which aims to provide pediatric patients and families with a physical, mental, and emotional healing experience through integrated cultural collaboration and programming.

Donations will be accepted through March 6, 2020. New or homemade blankets can be dropped off at the collection sites listed below. All sizes are needed for infants up to teens. Due to health concerns, gently used blankets are, unfortunately, not able to be accepted.
