COMMUNITY & REOPENING UPDATE 8-21-2020

Dear Friends:

I hope you and your families have recovered from the effects of Tropical Storm Isaias. Though our power and phones may be back online, we will never forget the wholly inadequate response of our utility and telecommunications providers. Following the storm, my office and I spent hours every day filling a critical customer service role that utility and telecommunications providers had abdicated. We fielded complaints from some of our most vulnerable residents, and we coordinated with these companies to ensure customers received proper attention. Lack of timely updates and systems for two-way communication between customers and these companies was just one of the major failures of the storm response.

Following the numerous failures of our utility and telecommunications providers, I fought for a public hearing to bring to light what went wrong and how things will be improved to ensure this pattern of failed storm responses does not continue year after year. The Senate and Assembly held a joint public hearing on Thursday, August 20th. Click here to watch the hearing. At the hearing, we heard from John Rhodes, Chair of the Public Service Commission, which oversees utilities and telecommunications providers, as well as the heads of Con Edison, NYSEG, Verizon, Altice (Optimum), and others. It is clear that major structural reforms must be implemented to protect the public and ensure improved performance. To that end, I will be announcing a package of bills this coming week to reform the NYS Public Service Commission, improve communication between providers and customers, and enhance accountability.

In addition to working to improve utility & telecommunication storm preparedness, this week I participated in a City & State webinar on Education in New York on Tuesday, August 18th; attended the Westchester County Police Reform & Reimagining Task Force Public Forum in Yonkers on the same day; and distributed food for seniors in New Rochelle. If there's an event in your community you'd like me to participate in, please email me at smayer@nysenate.gov or call my District Office at 914-934-5250.

100 YEARS OF VOTES FOR WOMEN

Tuesday, August 18th marked the 100th Anniversary of the ratification of the 19th Amendment granting American women the hard-fought right to vote nationally. With hard work and perseverance, we have made great progress to have women's voices represented in all levels of government. To commemorate the anniversary, I participated in a must-watch News 12 Women's Right to Vote: Power & Politics Special with Tara Rosenblum. I also joined Senate Majority Leader Andrea Stewart-Cousins for a bi-partisan discussion with our female colleagues in the State Senate titled 19 on 19: the History, Revolution, and Evolution of Women's Political Voices.
