WHEREAS, Across the country, people came together as Americans, putting flags outside their homes and businesses, and lining up at the Red Cross to donate blood for those in need; and

WHEREAS, Every year since, at the site of the World Trade Center, the Pentagon and Shanksville, Pennsylvania, Americans come together to hold memorials, reciting the names of those lost, so they will continue to live on in the hearts and minds of all Americans; and

WHEREAS, Ten years after the terrorist attacks that changed our world, we dedicated the National September 11 Memorial, where waterfalls that occupy the footprint of the Twin Towers are surrounded by the names of those lost in the attacks; and in 2014, the National September 11 Museum opened to the public, where people can come to learn and to reflect; and

WHEREAS, Today, 20 years later, we come together as a nation to remember and pay homage to those who perished in these horrific attacks and to honor those first responders who gave the ultimate sacrifice as they ran to help those in mortal danger; now, therefore, be it
