According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, small businesses make up 96% of New York's businesses and employ roughly half of the state's workers. The innovation, diversity, competitive strength, job creation, and quality of life that small businesses bring to our economy are vital elements of our State's long-term economic health.

Senator Sean Ryan said, "Small businesses are the backbone of our state. When they are thriving, New York is thriving. Small Business Month is an opportunity to celebrate small business owners and reaffirm our commitment to passing policies that support them. When we do that, we are not only helping the hundreds of thousands of entrepreneurs across the state – we're also helping the millions of New Yorkers they employ and boosting our state economy."
