He produced or directed more than 175 plays at Circle. In 1963, he founded Circle in the Square Theatre School. — Wire report

IN BRIEF

Empire State Senior Games set

CORTLAND | The Empire State Senior Games will be back next year. Machell Phelps of the Cortland Regional Sports Council says local organizers have an agreement with the state giving Cortland the go-ahead for the event through 2016. Phelps says Monday officials from Rochester and Buffalo also expressed interest in hosting the games. Budget cuts forced the state to cancel the senior competition in November 2010. Cortland then took them over and formed a committee to organize the event last year. The Senior Games are for people age 50 and older. Athletes compete in golf, track and field, volleyball, badminton and swimming. More than 1,100 seniors participated last year. Uncertainty kept that total down from the previous year. This year's event is a qualifier for the National Senior Games in Cleveland.

OBITUARIES

ROBERT JOHN

KALENAK

Robert John Kalenak, age 83, died peacefully on Wednesday, February 22nd 2012 surrounded by family at the Bath VA Medical Center following a brief illness.

Robert was born October 25th 1928 in Syracuse, NY, the son of John and Eleanor (Tama) Kalenak. Robert was a 1946 graduate of Onondaga Valley Academy High School. Robert served two tours in the Korean War between 1946 and 1951 while attending Lemoine college in Syracuse for industrial relations between tours. His was honorably discharged for each tour. Robert married Theresa Micheals on October 8th 1955.

Robert was a successful business man and one of the founding members of Woodland Specialties, a wholesale building materials supplier located in Syracuse where he worked for many years.

Robert relocated to Bath, NY in the mid 1980's where he worked at the DEC Fish Hatchery and later as a volunteer at the VA center. He was very fond of the Bath and Hammondsport community and the surrounding Finger Lakes region.

Appreciated for his endearing and, at times, wry humor, Robert was an avid history reader, enjoyed discussing politics and observing wildlife — particularly ducks and loons. He listening to big band and jazz music, was fond of crafts and was a skilled woodworker. He had a love for Ukrainian and Polish food and looked forward to each Friday's fish fry at the Chat A Whye Restaurant in Bath. He enjoyed sports and was an unwavering and ever frustrated Buffalo Bills and NY Mets fan. He was a strong supporter of environmental causes, a generous contributor to charities, and was a religious man and devout Catholic.

He will be deeply missed by many. Robert is survived by his sister, Betty Mooney of Jamesville, NY and his five children; Robert, John, Mary, David, and Patricia (St. Onge). Robert was the proud grandfather of Abigail and Lily St. Onge of Tupper Lake, NY and Katherine Raftery of Toledo, OH.

Mass of Christian burial will be held at the Bath VA Union Chapel,

Thursday, March 1st 2012 at 1p.m. Burial will follow at the Bath National Cemetery with military honors. ## BASES announced planned nationwide force reductions this month that would lean heavily on the Guard and would trim Reserve forces as well.

One focus for politicians is on Niagara Falls, where the 914th Airlift Wing of the Air Force Reserve and the 107th Airlift Wing of the New York Air National Guard share a tactical airlift mission. There are plans to reduce the number of C-130 transport planes, which has raised fears that fewer planes could leave the 107th without a mission, said Niagara Military Affairs Council chairman Merrell Lane.

Lane, whose group advocates for the base, said it is the largest employer in Niagara County and the loss of the Guard mission could cost about 800 civilian jobs.

"Western New York has always struggled," Lane said. "And the loss of that many jobs to western New York would be — it just wouldn't be good."

Members of New York's congressional delegation advocating for the Guard and Reserve at Niagara Falls have touted the base's proximity to the Canadian border. Gillibrand and others have asked Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano for a new Border Patrol station at a Niagara Falls military base.

In a similar vein, members of Congress are lobbying against a proposed $30 million cut to the Air Force Research Lab in Rome, touting the central New York facility's role in cyber-security. And they have lobbied Panetta not to retire transport planes at Stratton Air National Guard Base near Schenectady.

Officials say they are concerned about every military installation across the state, though some seem immune from major cuts because they have recently gained missions or are being upgraded.

In the Hudson Valley, the 105th Airlift Wing at Stewart Air National Guard Base is receiving C-17 Globemaster cargo planes to replace an older type of transport.

The Air National Guard's 174th Fighter Wing at Syracuse has operated unmanned Reaper drones over Afghanistan since December 2009 and also has a Reaper maintenance training facility. Last fall, the wing began flying the drones out of Fort Drum's Wheeler-Sack Army Airfield for takeoff and landing practice.

Fort Drum is home to the oft-deployed 10th Mountain Division and funding has already been approved for a new training complex to replace World War II-era buildings. Obama's budget proposal includes still more for Fort Drum, including $95 million for an aircraft hangar and $25.9 million for a data terminal complex for the Missile Defense Agency.

"I actually think Fort Drum will be fine," Gillibrand said, "and largely because Drum is one of the premier training bases in the whole country, including our remotely piloted aircraft training. It's one of the nation's future and expanding missions."

freeze on the local share of Medicaid, with a complete takeover in eight years. The bill follows recommendations of the state Association of Counties and a state study last year on Medicaid costs.

O'Mara said the takeover would be a difficult fiscal burden for the state, which would have to absorb the counties' $7.6 billion local share of Medicaid. However, picking up $1 billion annually is "feasible as the economy improves," he said.

The state takeover also would force reform and more efficient management, Palmesano said.

Another top issue is reforming the state's pension plan, which still allows civil and school employees with the most seniority to avoid retirement contributions, Palmesano said.

"Now that was fine when the stock market was doing OK," he said. "But the way it is now, it's unsustainable."

Other county issues raised Monday include:

- State shifting other costs onto county taxpayers: "It's a shell game," O'Mara said. "We have to stay alert to that ... Keep the pressure up statewide."
- Interstate 99 funding: O'Mara said the funding has been secured, and construction bids should go out this spring.
- State Capital Highway Improvement Plan funds: Palmesano said one-year extensions have been granted each of the past two years to allow funds to be used for gravel, and other "maintenance" materials. However, CHIPS funds are bonded and typically require the project lasts at least 10 years, O'Mara said.

• A decision by the state not to increase property taxes on those earning $250,000 or more: Palmesano said the measure is supported by upstate economic development lobbyists. "Wealthy people pay less, but the (business districts) benefit."

• Medicaid reform: Longtime Medicaid recipients contribute to the problem of waste, fraud and abuse, Palmesano said. "However, 25 percent of the people receiving Medicaid account for 70 percent of the costs. And that's the elderly and disabled."

• The 2 percent property tax cap: O'Mara and Palmesano said they reluctantly voted for it because Cuomo said he would reform Medicaid if the tax cap was in place. "Now the governor has to follow through on his promise," Palmesano said.

reform for years, complaining they have no control over costs or what services are offered. The medical program that aids low-income New Yorkers is the chief contributor in the so-called "Nine for 90" — the state-mandated programs paid for by counties, absorbing more than 90 percent of taxpayers' dollars every year. In Steuben, 95 percent of all property taxes are funneled to the state.

Palmesano and O'Mara said Cuomo's budgeted Medicaid cost reduction was an improvement, but does not go far enough. Cuomo's plan would gradually reduce the local share over four years, beginning in 2013-2014.

O'Mara said he has co-sponsored a bill to enact an immediate
