

As we all know, a habitat is an environment for an animal, or any plant needs so that they can live. Animals and plants live in their habitat to survive all throughout the world, without any habitats for them, any animal, plant, or species would not be able to live. This is why we need to stop habitat destruction.

Habitat destruction is a major problem for the world's wildlife, most of habitat destruction is caused by urbanization. Urbanization is the definition of "the process by which large groups of people become permanently concentrated in relatively small areas, forming cities." Urbanization is destroying nature and replacing it with huge cities or buildings that bring toxins into the air and around the habitats which animals, species, or any plants who live in that habitat, which is extremely terrible. According to National Geographic, if people continue urbanization, poor air and water quality will start increasing more and more which will harm both people, animals, and plants. Urbanization does not only harm animals and plants but also harms us and almost everything around it.

Luckily for us, there are some solutions that we can do to stop habitat destruction and save both animals' and plants' habitats. We can stop habitat destruction by creating private-public partnerships to provide services such as waste disposal. (National Geographic) Without any waste disposal in any habitats both the animals and plants that live in their habitat won't have to face habitat destruction towards them from such the mess and garbage that both the animals and plants have in their habitats. We could also be involved in local community services in the local government, (National Geographic) with healthier and cleaner habitats for the animals and plants, the animals and plants would be able to have a sustainable habitat and again won't have to face habitat destruction toward their habitats that they need to survive and live.

Overall, instead of us destroying habitats for both plants and animals, we should clean up the habitats of animals and plants and as well make more habitats for animals and plants. Habitats are an important thing all throughout the world, even to us. They're extremely important. Every animal or plant needs one to survive all throughout the world. It is important to think about the animals and plants that live in their habitats and how their habitats are their only way to live and survive, habitat destruction needs to be stopped for the safety of animals and plants, even for us as well.
