

Oh, great trees, how much we owe to you,
With branches high and roots so deep,
You give us shade, air to breathe, and fruits so sweet,
Your beauty inspiring poets and influencers to tweet.

In the community, you play an essential role,
Cleaning the air, fixing our harmful coal,
Your presence brings peace and a calm state of mind,
A sanctuary for all, humans and animals, to unwind.

Planting and caring for you is an act of love,
Pruning and trimming helps you grow above,
Conservation projects and sustainability are key,
To ensure your presence for future generations to see.

On school property, you enhance our learning,
Teaching us about nature and all its yearning,
Your leaves and bark, a haven for life,
From soil to fungus, lichen to moss, and animals in strife.

Native species, we must embrace,
Preserving your essence, we must never replace,
Oh, great trees, how much we owe to you,
A precious gift of nature, for all to pursue.
