Earth Day Every Day

We all know Earth Day is important but I think Earth Day should be more than one day. People should celebrate Earth Day by conserving natural resources, recycling, and stopping deforestation.

The first thing we can do to make Earth Day everyday is to keep a delicate balance of ecosystems. People should not waste things that help the earth. If people go fishing they should only fish for the amount they need, which could be 4-5 fish. If people are setting up a fire because they're camping they don't need to get so much wood because they are going to waste the wood they are gathering for the campfire. When you are done eating and there are still a few bites just finish it so you don't waste the food.

Another thing we could do to make Earth Day every day is recycle. People could go on a free day for at least an hour and pick up trash from the streets. If you drink a lot of water bottles you could have an extra garbage can and use it to recycle bottles. If people accidentally drop something on the floor, even the tiniest piece, they should pick it up.

One of the other things you can do to make Earth Day every day is don't cut down trees. People should not cut down that many trees for land because the trees make oxygen for humans. People shouldn't cut trees because then we wouldn't have houses made out of wood. If humans cut down trees the animals won't have houses to live in.

We can all make Earth Day every day by conserving our resources, recycling, and stopping deforestation.
