

The Qualities I am Thankful For are...

There are many qualities about myself for which I am thankful. One thing my family says is a great quality of mine is that I am kind. I won the kindness award in school a few years ago. It was such an amazing achievement for me. My motto is to always be a kid. The world is slowly plummeting to disaster. People need to start treating each other with respect or else the world will not be a pleasant place. There are many other qualities about myself for which I am thankful.

Another quality that I am thankful for is that I am loving. Without love, people will never be happy. With the love my family and I give to one another we all help each other out and get through things. I love how my family can run to me for love and support. That is what love is for. Watching people have a smile on their face makes my day. The last quality I am thankful for is that I am caring. I will never pass over a homeless person without giving them a bag of chips or some change. I would also never pass a hurt animal on the street; I would call for help. These qualities make me a better person every single day. That is why I am thankful for these qualities.

Without these qualities I would not be the person I am today. They define me as a person. They help me stay close to my faith and keep my life in place. These qualities make me special in my own way and what is why these are the qualities for which I am thankful.
