

Thanksgiving

~ by Caroline Mullin

Thanksgiving is a time for many things. I'm sure we all like to spend time with friends and family, eat a great dinner, etc. We should all be thankful for the things we have and the qualities we have.

There are many qualities to be thankful for this time of the year. First, a quality I have is to be caring. Although it can sometimes lead to being nosey, I do love to help everyone and care for them sometimes even before I care for myself.

Secondly, another trait I have is to never go for less. This is where I get my intense competitiveness but I enjoy it because I always try my hardest for everything. I never settle for less and I know that whatever I do, I put my heart into it.

Next, the last quality I have that I am thankful for is my self-reliance. It also means I cannot trust many people because I love everything to be perfect but it helps me realize if you want something done - do it yourself. This trait also corresponds with me always trying my hardest. These are three qualities that I have and am thankful for in my life.

During the holiday season or just all year round, it is important to realize and be thankful for things that people give you, tell you, or basically anything. To realize and be thankful for things that you can control or you haven't realized can change your mindset on that thing. For me, to change my thoughts on some of my personality traits or qualities helped me understand and be thankful for more things.
