

In autumn's embrace we gather around,
my heart full of gratitude we're found,
To celebrate blessings, both big and small.
In this Thanksgiving poem, let's give thanks to all.

Through the years, sacrifices made,
By those who paved the path, who blazed,
A trail of love, and care.

Their sacrifices, the burdens they bear.

The pioneers who braved the unknown,
Their courage and strength, to love that's shown
To build a nation, a future to share,

The hardships we face, should not compare.

As we sit at the table, our loved ones near,
Let's remember those who aren't with us here,

In our hearts, their memory is forever stowed.

The sacrifices of blood, sweat, and tears,
Have shaped our lives throughout the years,
Through hardships and trials, we've learned to be strong,

So, as we give thanks on this special day,
Let's cherish the sacrifices that light our way,
For in our embrace, we truly find,

The blessings of life from the heart and the mind.

Let's be thankful for all that we hold dear,
For the love of family, relationships we adhere,
For the hope and the dreams that tomorrow may bring,

In this Thanksgiving poem, our voices will sing.

In the spirit of thanks, our hearts unite,
With gratitude's glow, our souls take flight,

For sacrifices made, and blessings we see,

We give thanks to the past, the present, and for what's to see .
