During the Thanksgiving season it is meaningful to reflect on the qualities we possess that we are most thankful for. I am caring, thoughtful, and generous. Since I was two years old I have always loved helping those in need. My parents always remind me of how I would ask to donate my toys and clothes to less fortunate children. I encouraged my family to send money to children in poor countries to help provide food, shelter, and education.

Recently, I left a restaurant on a cold winter's night to bring soup to a homeless man. I also bought him a gift certificate to the restaurant so he can get meals the next day. I helped my dad organize a toy drive for less fortunate children during Christmas time. It filled my heart with happiness to help hand out the toys. I am fortunate to be able to help people in need and hope to continue displaying these important qualities.
