The quality I have that I am thankful for is responsibility. In the 5th grade, it is important to be thankful for the opportunity to learn and practice responsibility. Being responsible means taking ownership of my actions, and making sure I follow through on commitments. Whether it is completing homework on time, making all my cheer practices, helping my parents clean or being respectful to my brother and classmates, responsibility plays a very important role. Being responsible helps me create a positive learning experience.

By being thankful for the chance to develop these skills in the 5th grade, I can have a strong foundation for my future academic and personal success. Learning to be responsible at a young age can have a lasting impact on my future business women plans. This is why I am thankful for this important quality.
