

Thankfulness

There are many qualities that people have, the qualities that I am thankful are:
Truthfulness, Intelligence, Integrity, Wisdom, and Self Awareness.

The way I was raised since I was a tiny, little baby impacted every single one of the qualities that I have. My brothers seemed to tell the truth only partially, however they also from time to time lied just so that they could put frosting on some cupcakes. However, every time I get asked a question, it's muscle memory for me to answer. Do I have a crush? No. Am I good at math? Sorta. Do I like doing assignments on my chromebook?

Absolutely. I have also been raised with, I would consider it, a lot of integrity. I've stood up for my best friend multiple times against some good for nothing bullies, I've helped out people I've made friends with literally 5 minutes ago, it's kind of easy for me to help people. I've read multiple stories where people who lie get dealt with consequences (depending on how much they lied and how severe it is) such as "The Boy Who Cried Wolf."

I also feel like, even though I'm not an adult, I have wisdom. There was this time where me and my school group were so confused. They don't know if we could finish a big project in just a day. And neither did I. After a minute or two, half of my group began to fool around. However, I had the mindset of "If you think you're gonna fail, you're gonna fail. If you think you're gonna pass, you're gonna pass." So with that saying, I talked to some of the people in my group and they started to put in more effort. Even though this was on a chromebook, and most of my group (if not all) did not like doing assignments on their chromebook, they were actually doing pretty well. I was surprised, and proud of the people in my group. And after that class period, we finished the project. It was perfect! So much so that it turned out to help the people in my group change their minds on a subject, and vote for that subject! I've never actually worked with a group as good as that, so I'm still a bit surprised.

I believe that I have self awareness. Being aware of what's going on with the public, with the news, if I should go do certain things. For example, if I should go eating random candy without a care on Halloween. If I should go buying random stuff carelessly with my 5 hard-earned bucks in my wallet (yeah, I know I'm wealthy), etc. Having self awareness is very important. With news, with school, with the people around you, with your neighborhood, I could go on and on and on. A big example I think we can all come to agree with is if something goes down in your school, like if clubs are finally going to be open. You've been practicing hard to be one of the best players in the chess club!...But you don't realize that clubs are going to be open. My friend and I almost forgot to enroll in a coding club in fourth grade. Thank goodness we got in, because that club was amazing. And fun.

That is the conclusion to what I am grateful for. For a few honorable mentions, I am also grateful for my elementary school, P.S.229, I'm grateful for my parents, I'm grateful for my teachers and my middle school, and so much more.