I am grateful for the people in my life. People come and go, in and out of people's lives, but a few people have remained in mine. Friends mean the most, they have the choice whether they want to be your friend and stick with you or if they want nothing to do with you and if they want to just leave. Family on the other hand.. they don't really have a choice. My friends are always there for me wherever and whenever I need them, and even when I don't need them I know that they are there for me. Without my friends, I would be lost. It is almost like my life is a dark trail with many splits and turns, but only one way out and my friends are guiding me. I've fallen into many "holes" of emotions. When those emotions are negative and I'm stuck at the bottom of it, my friends are there to grab my hand and pull me out of that negative state. As much as they mean to me, my family is also important to me. Starting off obvious, without my mom I simply would not be here. She works very hard and does her best for me and my brother and I appreciate everything that she does. My mom is also always there for me and I know that she always will be, we have so much fun together even if it is something other people would see as boring, like going on walks. Those little walks and just overall spending time with her makes me so happy. My brother has also helped me through many things and I appreciate that from him as well, yeah we argue, yeah we fight but we're brothers, that's what we do. Even though I never win our fights, it is always fun and something we look back on later. I always tell myself I am going to win next time but that never happens, it is almost like my brother knows I don't stand a chance against him in any of our fights unless it involves arguments because I tend to be good at winning in those kinds of situations. My grandparents also mean the world to me, they do everything and beyond for me and my brother and I appreciate every single thing they do for us. Even the simple acts that people do for me mean the world to me, people should never worry about what to get me because overall they don't need to and if they do, I know i'll appreciate whatever they give. Many people may struggle picking things out that they actually appreciate because they don't realize how much the little things that people do for them mean, lots of people only care about value of things, value and or price is not what matters, what matters is that there is people out there who actually care about us, and when they do stuff for us, the least we can do is show how much we appreciate them.
