Qualities I Am Thankful For...

Thanksgiving is a time about being thankful for the things and people you love. You can show your thankfulness through acts of kindness, good deeds, and even something as simple as giving a compliment to someone. You should always be kind to people and show respect to them because they will be thankful for you if you are a good person.

I am thankful for curiosity. I am thankful for my curiosity because I get to learn about the world around me by asking questions to my peers and adults. I am very thankful for my loyalty. I believe that being loyal is the most important quality that a person could have. I believe that loyalty is so important because it is important to remember the people that were with you when you were at your lowest, because if they were with you when you weren't successful, they deserve to celebrate with you when you are successful. I am thankful that I am an ambitious person because I get a lot done. I will not stop what I am working on, whether that be school work or sports, until I successfully complete it. I am also thankful for my honesty because people will trust me and think that I am a trustworthy and reliable person. I am courageous because if I wasn't, I would never take risks and I wouldn't experience all that life has to offer. Finally, I am thankful for my respect to others. I am thankful for my respect because if you give respect to others, you will get it back; it may not be that day or that moment, but eventually respect will come back in a positive way.

During this Thanksgiving season, I will use all of my good qualities to show my thanks to others and hopefully influence them to change some of their own bad qualities into good ones that will leave a lasting impression on the world. If everyone used their good qualities, the world would be a better, more peaceful place to live in.
