As the leaves fall from the trees and a gentle breeze passes me, I see all the colors from red to green. The time flashes before my eyes and I have all of these things, clothes to stay warm and love to keep me sworn that I will always be thankful. I have shelter and food and my parents who come through to help me everyday. I have water and trust from my family who cares for me. Books and things I don't really need but I have because I'm lucky to be me.

Education, friends, and an easy life compared to others. I have talents and things I can do and people to see me. I have strength and guidance through my life and times that make me stronger. I have mistakes, a lot but I take a hike to a place called my home, the birth of my perseverance. I'm smart, try to do everything and have a big family to help me. I see all these things and think wow, I'm thankful to be me.

I love my life, my surroundings and talents, they leave some sort of memory in me. I am lucky to have all of this, for some people really need this, so I'm very pleased. I'm given chances to enter contests and go to school. My parents are willing to help me every step of the way. Though people say siblings are foolish, I say they are amazing. They only think of what they do and take. They help me with problems and life and always stand by me. So, I have a lot of things I am thankful for which cannot even fit on this paper so I know what I'm thankful for forever.
