

Thankfulness and Gratefulness

BY: Philip Alfieri

Thanksgiving is the celebration of what you are thankful for. Gratefulness is a powerful word because being grateful is what I have and everybody else has. I can walk to school, eat dinner with my family, which is what some people don't have. The United States is such a powerful country because it gives people the right to be thankful. Giving gratefulness away is what people sacrificed for us to be grateful.

Taking something for granted isn't working for it which means it doesn't matter to you. Education is what people are fighting for in other countries. People take education for granted when we are one of the only countries who has education for everyone. I can accidentally not lock my doors and nothing would happen. This is the time to show thanks to everyone, because we've done good to them, and they've done good to us.

Remembrance is also what we should be thankful for. Thanksgiving wouldn't be a holiday nor would we have Thanksgiving. We need to thank the pilgrims for showing gratefulness. We need to praise the world because the world makes Thanksgiving, Thanksgiving. Thanksgiving is also the celebration of giving.

We should give a celebration to the people who don't have it. Thanksgiving should be celebrated in every country because being thankful and grateful is what everybody has.
