I am grateful for my mom because One thing that sticks in my head is the fact that my mom has given up so much of her time for me and to be honest, she has gone a bit crazy in the process as well. She has always been there, even when she was totally drained or had a other things to do. She has gone out of her way a million times to drive me to school, practices, and activities so that I could never miss anything that is important to me. When I am unwell, she doesn't sleep all night because she is constantly checking on me and making sure I am comfortable even though she barely sleeps herself. She is the one who puts people first and then her own self and after all that, she still manages to keep everything in order. My mom is the person who loves and gives her all to others without even coming up with the idea of asking for something in return and I am pretty sure that without her love, patience, and support that never runs out, I would not be the person I am today.
