What I Am Thankful For

For all of my life, I have always been pretty diverse in the things I liked and had invested time into; these phases only really lasted around a month or two, but there are a few things that I'm truly grateful for, both from my real life and for things I found online, but mostly in real life. The thing I am most proud of is the true friends I've made here, starting with Xavier, Vincent, Yesica, Nick, and Natalie, whom I met in Lowell Middle School, and then Vaneshka and Messiah, whom I met in high school. Before heading to Lowell, I used to go to a public school, which was PS 96, which was pre-K through 8th. I never really liked it there, and I never really liked any of my classmates; they always had mouths like sailors, and yet they were all nasty people. But here it feels a lot quieter... (most of the time). But I'd say I'll always prefer this over back then.

I'm also thankful
