What I'm Thankful For...

What are you thankful for? You might be thankful for your family and friends. When you are thankful, you show others gratitude and thank people that get you gifts and money. I'm thankful for my family, friends, education, and sports. This essay will be about why these things are important to me.

I'm thankful for my family because they help me when I need it. My mom helps me with homework and school projects. Another thing she does for me is take care of me when I'm sick. My dad always practices sports with me, whether it's baseball, basketball or flag he is always there to help. My family makes me feel good because I'm lucky to have them. My family is also important to me because they support me and come cheer me on at my games.

My friends are special to me because they help me when I'm with them. They comfort me when I'm sad. Some examples that me and my friends do together are we talk about sports, we play sports together, and we help each other. We also share our biggest secrets with each other. A moment when my friend made me happy was when we went fishing together. I don't think I caught anything but it was still really fun. My appreciation for my friend is how we spend our time together.

I'm thankful for my education because going to such a good school will help me get into a good highschool, college and then get me a great job. I'm also thankful for my teachers because I can't have an education without their help. I'm thankful for sports and activities because they give me and other people something to do. Learning new skills is fun because you can try to do it on people you are versing. What I've learned about being thankful is to always show gratitude to people.

In conclusion I have many things I am thankful for. Family, friends and education are an important part of my life. It's important to be thankful and appreciate what you have!
