

Gratefulness at its finest

Life is filled with many things that you'll either hate, love, or have no feelings about but that is the way of human life. Not everything is worthwhile giving your time and energy for and even the things you should care about; you couldn't care less about. Everyone's grateful for something even if it's about something someone else would consider insignificant. For example, I'm grateful for being able to have such an easy-going life, to be able to feel like I'm a good person and emotionally intelligent regardless of if I'm genuinely all those things or if I'm not those things; and for being as smart and pretty as I am. Those things like me being grateful for my emotional intelligence, my knowledge, my beauty, and having a good life aren't the only things I'm grateful for. I'm beyond imaginably grateful for my two undeniably gorgeous sisters. They mean the world to me and no matter how many times or why we get into a disagreement or ever are on bad terms, my unwavering love for them will stand forevermore. I'm grateful for my brother as well despite not having seen him in years because during the time I seen him all the time, he was the most fun and enjoyable brother anyone could ever ask for. I'm also grateful to my parents. My mother's love for me never seems to falter, and I can say the same in regard to my father. My mother always does the best she can for me all while making herself a better person as each day goes on. She does everything for me and gives me everything I could possibly ask for no matter how long it'll take so, who am I to be ungrateful for such a God-given blessing like her? My father is also a great part of my life. He loves me dearly and never proves otherwise to me and loves all his children equally. He gets me whatever I want and always has my best interests in mind for me. I wouldn't ever dare to wish for another father because I can't think of anyone else who would be a better father to me. Being alone is okay but never lonely so why not make connections with people who make you happier than ever and make you feel cherished? Leading with that, I'm grateful for the friends I have. I was so lonely in elementary school and the moment I entered middle school; my life turned around simply because of my friends. School can be tiring, doing the same thing every year but it's much better with friends who love u as much as u love them. Yes, don't talk to strangers unless they're your age. I'm glad I talked to 'strangers' in school; they're one of the best parts of my life now. I'm not just grateful for all the things in my life most people would consider good, but also the things that some people wouldn't consider something that they're grateful for if they don't think about it the way I do. I'm grateful for all the times I was horribly wrong in an argument, the times someone wronged me, and the times that felt like everything would go to shambles. At the end of the day, you keep living regardless, and I know anybody's life would be better if they had just one more thing every day to be grateful for. It takes absolutely nothing to be thankful for the beauty in your life.